David is a senior executive within our Operations Group. With significant experience leading, advising, and improving the performance of companies, David collaborates with our investment team to identify opportunities within businesses that are being considered for investment. Once investments have been made, he works with his fellow partners to drive strategic, operational and leadership initiatives at its portfolio companies.

During his career, David has worked in a variety of executive and operational advisory roles, “parachuting” into organizations to serve as the conduit to drive value and change. He has led over 60 engagements in North America and Europe across several industry sectors and held many C-level (CEO, CRO, and COO) positions as well as senior executive level roles across a wide range of business functions.

David specializes in developing strategic frameworks and implementing operational solutions to maximize value and foster long-term sustained improvement. He is particularly adept at jumpstarting growth and helping businesses scale. It is in these scenarios that he excels at advising and working alongside executives and other professionals by establishing credibility and trust with constituents at all levels of the organization.

Prior to working as an executive and as an operational advisor, David spent eight years at Arthur Andersen where he led the retail and consumer product industry verticals for European offices. Before Arthur Andersen, he worked as Vice President for an international manufacturing and construction firm, developing new markets and investments in one of their utility divisions. He began his career working as a project manager and site manager leading all manufacturing, design, and build work within this company.

David has served on multiple boards and managed and advised businesses representing various categories (retail, manufacturing, distribution, and services) as well as industries including consumer, plastics, apparel, energy and gas, food, construction, and steel. He has a Bachelor of Science in Engineering from the University of Illinois and a Master of Business Administration from the University of Chicago.
